Ramwall Group

Building Homes That Work for Everyone

High profile on Highbrook Drive, Ramwall Group is a property platform and development company with a clear mission: shaping property to create enduring value for communities and future generations.

Ramwall Group's foundations date back to Landmarx Development in 2000. Since then, the company has delivered more than 675 homes. Today, its work extends across residential, wellness, commercial and long-term accommodation sectors, bringing property development, construction and investment together under one integrated group.

The need for more inclusive, adaptable and well-designed homes remains a persistent challenge in Auckland and beyond.

Through its Wellness Living framework, Ramwall Group is developing purpose-built housing designed to support wellbeing, connection and changing community needs. This approach can be seen in Notre Dame Living, its recently completed development of 23 single-level homes in Pukekohe, designed for people aged 55 and over.

Building to this standard from the outset, rather than retrofitting later, reflects a wellness-centred philosophy that treats accessibility as a baseline expectation rather than an afterthought.

Ramwall Group also brings a distinct character to its projects: decisions shaped by long-term relationships and community outcomes. This positions the company within a growing movement of New Zealand property developers who see housing not just as an asset class, but as essential social infrastructure.

Arjun Sami, Managing Director of Ramwall Group, said:

“Moving to Highbrook marks an important next step for Ramwall Group. It provides a base that reflects the business today and supports greater collaboration as we continue building for the future.”

NEW TO Highbrook

Energy Spurt

Energy Spurt's Auckland Operations Base is Now Fully Operational.

Energy Spurt has opened its New Zealand headquarters in Highbrook, Auckland, establishing a local base to support installers, distributors and EPC partners across New Zealand and the Pacific.

The company supplies a broad range of renewable energy products, including solar panels, battery energy storage systems, inverters, EV chargers, mounting systems and electrical accessories. Today, Energy Spurt works with more than 800 businesses across New Zealand, Australia and the Pacific.

The Highbrook location provides direct access to Auckland's transport and logistics network, allowing faster delivery, local stock holding and improved technical support for customers throughout New Zealand.

Rather than simply supplying products, Energy Spurt focuses on supporting its customers throughout the entire project lifecycle. That includes local inventory, technical support, product training and after-sales service, helping installers complete projects efficiently and grow their businesses.

Energy Spurt's product portfolio includes globally recognised brands such as Sigenergy and Jinko, backed by a local team with extensive experience in the renewable energy industry.

As demand for renewable energy continues to grow across New Zealand and the Pacific, the company plans to continue investing in local capability, expand its distribution network and strengthen relationships with installers, EPC contractors and wholesale partners.

Keong Kao, Managing Director, Energy Spurt NZ / Pacific Islands, said:

"Highbrook gives us the right base to support our customers across New Zealand. It offers excellent access to transport and logistics, allowing us to respond faster and provide better local support. Our focus is simple — reliable stock, strong technical support and long-term relationships that help our customers grow."

IN FOCUS

A Warehouse Built Around the Business

At Highbrook, Fackelmann New Zealand has taken a distinctive approach to warehousing: designing the building around how the business actually operates, rather than fitting operations into a generic space.

The result is a purpose-built facility at 70 Waiouru Road, complete with a covered container breezeway and an unusual 180-degree building rotation, both reflecting the specific mechanics of managing thousands of products across retail, grocery and hospitality channels.

The move to this custom facility followed years of relying on a third-party logistics provider. For a business handling such a large and varied product range, that lack of direct control over storage, picking, and shipping eventually became a limiting factor. Bringing warehousing back in-house was less about dissatisfaction with outsourcing in general and more about needing a facility tailored precisely to Fackelmann's own processes.

Highbrook itself was never in question. Fackelmann's ties to the business park go back to the mid-2000s, with an earlier presence at a Mount Wellington facility before that. When a site at 70 Waiouru Road, one of the last available development parcels in Goodman's Highbrook portfolio, became available, it offered the company a rare chance to build exactly what it needed while staying rooted in a location and business community it already valued.

Construction began in early 2022, and the warehouse and office building were completed by March 2023, with the Fackelmann team relocating later that year. Alongside the operational upgrades, the new facility incorporates sustainability features including water collection and EV charging.

For Fackelmann, the payoff extends beyond logistics efficiency. As the company's own team describes it, Highbrook remains a central, well-connected location and a genuinely attractive business park to be part of, making the investment in a custom-built home well worth it.
